새로운 단어 NEW VOCABULARY

DISTINGUISH BETWEEN PARTICLES 은/는 & 이/가

Korean Beginners Level 1

Lesson 5:
I Am Not An Office Worker

- These are BOTH subject markers ... this is VERY CONFUSING for Korean learners
 - BOTH change their form depending if there is a preceding batchim 은 & 이 or not 는 & 가
- There will be cases when either 은/는 OR 이/가 can be used
 - With the meaning of either sentence being the same
- There will be other cases where the meaning changes significantly
 - It is complex depending on surrounding CONTEXT
 - Whilst both mark the subject of the sentence, O/I 7/ emphasises the subject specifically
- A subject of a sentence is the person or thing that is doing an action verb or being described
 - We have been looking at Introductions with a person/subject being "described"
 - In Korean, when using an action verb, the subject marker is always 이/가 rather than 은/는

Lesson 5:

I Am Not An Office Worker

AN EXAMPLE 은/는 & 이/가

- 폴은 영국 사람이에요.
 - The context maybe an introduction of Paul, he happens to be from England.
- 폴이 영국 사람이에요.
 - A conversation maybe about British culture, and someone says that Paul is from England so the connotation becomes that he specifically would know that culture.

AN EXAMPLE 은/는 & 이/가

Korean Beginners Level 1

Lesson 5:
I Am Not An Office Worker

저는 회사원이에요. Introduce yourself as an office worker.

제가 회사원이에요.You are surrounded by people with other jobs, and you say "Yes, I am an office worker."

동생은 의사예요. Introduce your brother as a doctor.

동생이 의사예요. You are talking with people about illnesses, and you say "my brother is a doctor."

동생은 의사가 아니에요, 선생님이에요. My younger brother isn't a doctor, he is a teacher
